

Five quotes:

The Glass Slipper: "He had likewise, by another wife, a young daughter, but of un-parallelled goodness and sweetness of temper, which she took from her mother who was the ~~greatest~~ best creature in the world."

"He had Cinderella sit down, and, putting the slipper to her foot, he found that it went on very easily, fitting her as if it had been made of wax."

"There was immediately a profound silence. Everyone stopped dancing, and the young ladies ceased to play, so entranced was everyone with the singular beauty of the unknown newcomer."

"She reached home, but quite out of breath, and in her nasty old clothes, having nothing left of all her finery but one of the little slippers, the mate to the one that she had dropped."

"And now her two sisters found her to be that fine, beautiful lady who they had seen at the ball."

The Wonderful Birch: "The woman neither spat, nor did she run between her legs, but yet the witch ~~turned~~ changed her into a sheep."

"Then the good wife met a witch, who said to her, 'If you spit, you miserable ~~creature~~ creature, if you spit into the sheath of my knife, or if you run between my legs, I shall change you into a black sheep.'"

"... but gather all my bones, and bury them by the edge of the field..."
 "She did not touch the soup, but she ~~had~~ carried the bones to the edge of the field and buried them there; and there sprang up on the spot a birch tree - a very lovely birch tree."

"... and I will give you a witch on the blade of my knife; bewitch my knife's blade for me, and I shall never spit nor do anything else"
